Subject: Things to do for Fun Day

Dear Nicky

Could you please do the following three things for me?

We want to hand out some leaflets before the Fun Day to encourage people to come. I've designed a basic template for a leaflet but I need you to add in the details. Include:

- the place, date and time (in the top box)
- the activities
- the special guests (mention why they're famous)
- our organisation name and phone number (in the bottom box)

Look at the minutes of the last Fun Day Planning Committee meeting and your notes from the Bookmark podcast.

I need the information about the Thai Ladies performance. Please send me an email with the information you've managed to find out, like:

- how much time the dancers need and how many people they're bringing
- what they need and if it's available from the Hong Kong Parks Department
- any costs involved
- any possible problems

Finally, Lionel Chan is going to be one of our special guests at the Fun Day. Write a short descriptive paragraph about him to put on our website. Please include information about:

- his background and family
- his current and previous jobs
- his new book

You should be able to get information from the book jacket of his latest book, the Booklore website and your notes from the Bookmark podcast.

Thanks for your help.

Subject: Fun day dance

Dear Nicky

Thanks for meeting me last week.

We're delighted to be coming to the Fun Day. There will be 14 dancers and we'll need about 25 – 30 minutes in total for the performance. We'll also be bringing a few more people to help, probably three – four. So could you make sure we have enough space for all of us? Plus all of our dance costumes and bags?

We'll need a stage so that people can see us and please make sure we have electricity available to play the music. We can provide a music system. It may be a good idea for you to provide some chairs for old people to sit down. I know that sometimes the Hong Kong Parks Department provide lights but we don't need lights.

Dear Nicky

Thanks for your email about equipment. We can provide some different things free of charge for your Fun Day:

- A stage (capacity 10 people)
- Tables
- Microphones
- Outdoor lights

Please note that we can only provide one stage.

If you need further equipment, we can provide things such as chairs and generators for electricity. Please note that we will need to charge you 500 dollars deposit for up to 100 chairs and 150 dollars deposit for each electricity generator. You would need one generator for a music system and one for lights.

Please let me know what you need as soon as possible.

Dear Mr Tse

I represent an NGO called Cultural Commons. We promote cross cultural activities. This year Cultural Commons is holding a Fun Day in one of your parks. And there will be a dance performance.

Please could you send me some details about the kind of equipment you have available for this kind of event? If you can include information about costs too, that would be very helpful.

Comments from Reader Reviews

Loved it. Specially the stories about people from India, Colombia and Cameroon ;-).

Lionel sends his daughter to our local school in Tai Po. His wife is from Sri Lanka. He writes about immigration because he lives it.

It's a good book, we can learn about communication in Hong Kong from these stories! And did you know that he's giving all the profits from the sales of this book to Cultural Commons? So buy it!

This is not as interesting as his last book, Talk to me. I give it a two:

I think it's a good book – it's only $100 HK. Read it.

Subject: Things to do

Dear Nicky

I've got three things for you to do.

We're going to carry out an online survey about barriers to communication in Hong Kong. Please write an introductory paragraph for the survey. Include:

- what a barrier is
- barriers related to the Hong Kong way of life
- the effects of each barrier or how people feel as a result

Don't mention barriers related to body language as we did that in another survey. Have a look at that 'Living in Hong Kong' newsletter article as a starting point.

We want to start a new advice page on our website focusing on a different area of communication each month. This month's focus will be on body language. Use the website template to:

- explain the problems associated with each aspect of body language shown
- give advice about body language related to each

Take a look at the extract from Isobel Tait's article 'A Review of Research into Body Language' as a starting point.

Fairfax Secondary School has asked us to write a short article for their school newsletter. It's a special edition for their Multi-Cultural Awareness Week. They want us to write about the practical difficulties faced by people from different countries who come to live in Hong Kong and the help available from the community in Hong Kong.

Please write the article. I found some statistics in one of Lionel Chan's research articles. Use that as your starting point. We've only been given space for 200 words so make sure it's about that length.

Remember that your notes from the Bookmark podcast will be useful for all of these.

Thanks for your help.

School in Hong Kong at last...

I've been in Hong Kong for a month and tomorrow is my first day at school. I'm a little bit scared. But my mum says not to worry. That's easy for her to say!

Week 1: Nobody listens!!

Posted on February 1, 2011 @ 6:01 PM

Today the school secretary asked me if I'd had any problems since arriving in Hong Kong. I started answering her question but she just interrupted me with what she thought I was going to say. I felt like what I had to say wasn't important. This is how I felt:

Week 2: My Body's Language!?

Posted on February 10, 2011 @ 6:13 PM

There's some good news this week!! I sat next to a girl called Ka Man in class, but she told me to call her Carmen. She seemed a bit shy but she asked me about Nepal and how it is different from Hong Kong. Then, my teacher asked me to do a presentation about Nepal to my class next week. I'm going to show some photos and play some music too! I did a practice run and she gave me some tips about body language like paying attention to how I stand. She said that if I put my hands on my hips when I present I look over-confident – a bit arrogant. She told me to relax my arms and let them hang by my side...I think I need to practise ;-).

Week 3: New Friends

Posted on February 19, 2011 @ 11:43 AM

Success! I did my presentation! My classmates asked loads of questions and some classmates are going to lend me some Cantonese music and I'm going to lend them some Nepalese movies! The school social worker had a chat with me today after school and she told me about a local youth club run by Cultural Commons for all the kids in Sham Shui Po, including kids from different countries, like me. She said I can go next week after school on Friday – but I need to ask my mum and dad first. I'm so excited, I'll be able to make some more friends. I told Carmen and she's going to ask her mum too! I hope we can go!

There is sufficient evidence at this stage to safely conclude that certain aspects of body language can have both positive and negative effects on the perceptions of others in a variety of contexts and cultures (Lo, 1999; Lo and Francis, 2001). It has even been argued that body language is the most important aspect of human communication (Duncan, 2004).

De Frietas (2006), for example, found that how people stand has a significant effect on listeners' perceptions of the speaker when giving presentations. She found that in a job interview situation, candidates actually failed the interview based on the way that they stood when asked to give a presentation.

Amocatchi (2008) conducted a survey, in which she showed over 1,000 different people a drawing of someone folding their arms. She asked them what kind of message they thought was being transmitted. The results can be seen in Figure 2 below. Amocatchi concludes that the best advice for listeners is to avoid confusion by reverting to a neutral position, i.e. with their hands loosely clasped in front of them.

Imagine waking up in a brand new country. Have you ever wondered what that might feel like? This month, three recent arrivals in Hong Kong – Mina, Georg and Tariq – talked about their new lives in Hong Kong.

First of all, welcome to Hong Kong. How long have you been here and what are you doing here?

Mina: Well, Georg and I are students at Kowloon University and we've been here for three months.

Tariq: I'm originally from Oman and I've come to live with my grandparents and help in the family business. I've been here for two months.

Are you enjoying life in Hong Kong?

Georg: Yes, we all think it's a great place – for me, it's very different from Sweden which is where I come from.

We wanted to ask you today about communication in Hong Kong. Have you come across any barriers?

Georg: The pace of life here is so fast, everyone seems to be in a hurry and they don't seem to have the time to talk to you. So I guess time is a barrier.

Mina: I know just what you mean, like when I was in a shop last week, I was trying to ask about the price of something and the shop assistant wouldn't take the time to answer my questions. It was really frustrating.

Tariq: Frustrating for you, but ultimately businesses suffer because you end up going to another shop and the first shop loses custom.

Mina: Exactly.

Tariq: Noise as well can be a real barrier. I have had several instances when I've received a phone call when I was on a big busy road, like Nathan Road or somewhere, and I simply couldn't understand what was being said. On one occasion it was an important phone call about a job interview I'd attended and I just couldn't catch what was being said.

Is there anything that you've found difficult about living in Hong Kong?

Tariq: At first I couldn't find a doctor but then someone told me about some free clinics near where I live in Mongkok. There are four of them offering free clinics once a week.

Georg: Not really – sometimes I miss the food from home, but then I found a website which gave me information about shops which sell food from Sweden and a list of restaurants I can go to. It's great.

Mina: I love the local food, so it's not a problem for me.

Well, thanks for talking to us and we hope you continue to enjoy living in Hong Kong.

Lawyers step up

Local lawyers, Venny Wong and Theresa Lam, who both work at law firm Chan and Wang Legal Company, have taken the decision to provide pro bono services to newcomers coming to live in Hong Kong through a community-based legal advice scheme.

"We realised that there are some people who come to live in Hong Kong who need a bit of extra help," explained Venny Wong. "They arrive in a new country and face practical difficulties like dealing with immigration or finding legal advice for other matters. Often they can't afford that advice."

Both Venny and Theresa have decided to try to build up a network to encourage others to do more.

Theresa explains, "We're already talking to friends from other businesses to see if they want to help."

In fact, they've already had some success. Enrique Ramirez, an estate agent in Kwun Tong, is offering a helping hand. "We provide a commission-free service to help newcomers to find somewhere to live in Hong Kong. So far we've helped about 20 families," he explained.

Government organizations are also doing their bit to help. The Hong Kong Tourism Board has recently produced a new MTR map for tourists and newcomers. "It will help people new to Hong Kong find their way round so they can shop till they drop," a spokeswoman announced.
